Since Frank James was acquitted, he has been dubbed a "colonel." Nothing succeeds like success.

The mother of Joaquin Miller furnishes the country with the latest sensation. She is 60 years old, and has just married one of her farm hands who is only 22.

Socially, the negro must now look out for himself. By a manly bearing, a disreputation that is commanding, and an attention to business matters that win respect, he can do much to build up an honorable social position.

It is announced by one prominent paper in the south that if the Merionese send eighteen missionaries to the southern states, as they say they will do, they will send eighteen candidates for tar and feathers.

The State Journal says that Miss Ella Wheeler, who will divide the coming winter with Milwaukee, Chicago and St. Louis, is kept busy writing short stories and poems for eastern and western newspapers and magazines, and that the prices for her work have trebled since the publication of her Poems of Passion. Ella was not dull in knowing how to capture public sentiment.

The agent for the Jesse James blood and thunder company threatens to sue Mayor Conklin, of Madison, for refusing to grant him a show license in that city and will lay his damages at $15,000. The agent tried to scare the mayor into issuing the necessary license, but he had too much backbone for the arrogant agent, and the more the official thought about the matter the more he thought he wouldn't allow the Jesse James combination show in Madison. The popular sentiment in that city will snuff Mayor Conklin, and every city in the north-west which has any regard for its morals should follow the wise example of Madison.

In Massachusetts they have a state board called the board of health, insanity and charity, which consists of nine persons. Mrs. Clark J. Leonard, has held a place on the board for some time, but Governor Butler was opposed to having a woman on the board, and counting the place vacant for the alleged reason that a woman could not be a legal member of the board, he nominated a man to take her place. The attorney general decided that whereas the statute provides that the board "shall consist of nine persons," a woman was not legally a "person," but the executive council of the state paid no attention to the rulings of the attorney general, and sustained Mrs. Leonard.

The exposition art gallery at Milwaukee has been a success this year. It was well filled with paintings, and many of them were fine specimens of art. The sales will aggregate about $15,000, possibly $18,000. The large painting, "Everlasting Snows," a scene in Colorado, is said to have brought $5,000, but we judge it went for very much less than that sum, as the artist was anxious to dispose of it at any reasonable price. It was painted by Mr. Frank C. Bromley, of Chicago, a young man of decided talent. It was sold to Mr. D. W. Clark, of Dodgeville, who bought it for exhibition purposes. DeHass's "Moonrise off Marblehead," was sold to Mrs. Alexander Mitchell for $600. Mrs. Mitchell purchased pretty heavily, taking many of the best pictures in the gallery.

The commissioner of pensions has just forwarded his report to the secretary of the interior, in which he claims that the high tide of pension expenditures has been passed, and that of the remaining quarter of a million of applications now on file a great proportion will fail of success for want of proper proof of claim. The great bulk of claims that are genuine and could be sustained under the law by the necessary evidence have been considered and acted upon, leaving the cases in which the claimants have been unable to perfect their papers to be disposed of. That a large proportion of these will be rejected cannot be doubted, and unless congress foolishly opens the doors still more widely it is not probable that the pension rolls will be swelled to any very great extent during the coming two years in which the present applications will be finally disposed of. If congress will only firmly make up its mind that it shall not be controlled by claim agents, the worst regarding the pensions is over.

There is a good deal of mystery surrounding the murder of Adm. Atkinson, in Indiana. Of course old Jacob Nelling confessed to have murdered the beautiful girl, but his confession makes the murder all the more mysterious. Nelling worked on Miss Atkinson's father's farm. She was alone in the field at work. He knew she was alone. He had no cause to bear the girl any ill-will, and had not the least prejudice against her. But knowing she was alone in the house, the thought struck the old man that he should murder her. He went to the house, committed the deed, and in the most brutal manner possible, and after washing his hands he returned to the field and resumed his work. For three weeks he passed in and out of the house after the murder had been committed, keeping the secret to himself. But he confessed to committing the crime, and in the very face of the fact that he knew he would be hanged either by a mob or by due process of law. However strong the suspicions were against him, he could never have been convicted, for he alone held the secret. His confession under the circumstances is a remarkable one, and is another strong proof that sometimes it is impossible to explain the condition of the human mind that will lead one to commit a cold-blooded murder without a possible cause.

NEWBORG'S CENTENNIAL.

Commemorating the Disbandment of the Victorious Revolutionary Armies.

An Impressive Procession and Brilliant Public Pageantry—The Elements Profligate.

A Glorious Time.

NEWBORG, N. Y., Oct. 19.—All the trains and boats were loaded with visitors Wednesday night, and hotel accommodations were exceedingly difficult to obtain. There was quite a demonstration at night, consisting of fire-works, a torch-light procession and fireworks display. The bay was illuminated by electric lights along the river front, and a large number of vessels, including yachts, steamboats and United States war-ships, riding at anchor, made a picturesque scene. Brass bands and the fire and drama seemed not to be still during the night. Mayor Ward held a reception in honor of the distinguished guests.

At sunrise five navy vessels fired salutes, which were responded to from shore by cannon planted at Washington's headquarters and elsewhere on both sides of the river, and by ringing all the church bells. There were hundreds of thousands of people on the streets. One train on the West Shore Railroad arrived in four sections with 1,500 passengers. One Erie train with two engines had nineteen cars packed with people and the platforms were also crowded. The New York Central and local roads are also pouring into town masses of people. The lawns of Washington's headquarters were thronged long before the hour for beginning the exercises. Two hundred New York policemen all the local force in preserving order. The city never presented so fine a display. Flags flew everywhere, and there was an unclouded sky. Not less than fifty thousand strangers are in town. A great number of steamboats arrived, bringing military and excursion parties. The Seventh Regiment of New York, with the veteran corps, arrived by special train. The Twenty-third and Thirtieth Brooklyn Regiments arrived on the Erie. The 6888 Central Postal Directory is owing to the late arrival of the State troops, the parade was not even forming at the time appointed for the march. The trains north on the Hudson River Road were delayed by the breaking down of the engine of a way train with sixteen crowded coaches. The future of the Hudson River Road is a notable body. The Hudson looks as if a band of "red-tailed" soldiers had come again upon earth with their uniforms, step and tactics of Revolutionary days. The scene around the reviewing stand was inspiring. Spectators crowded every vantage spot, and enthusiastically cheered the various organizations on their marches to the rendezvous.

The Centennial House is decorated with National flags, streamers and bunting. The residences on the opposite side of the street bear the arms of Massachusetts and Virginia. Governor Cleveland and staff arrived from Albany on the West Shore train at 10:30. The train had eighteen coaches crowded with passengers. President Arthur sent a letter of regret. Ex-Senator Conkling was also invited, but could not come. The procession started at 12:15, an hour and a quarter late. The Governors and their staffs, the Generals and their staffs, and the marines, soldiers and favorite troops of the State made an imposing display, while joined with these were the visiting troops of veterans, civil societies, and the various organizations, four miles long. It marched in five divisions, with five bands of music in each division. The line was much crowded with people, who applauded enthusiastically. The windows and steps everywhere were filled with ladies, who clapped their hands or waved their handkerchiefs as the troops marched past.

After the parade the visiting regiments and guests were given refreshments at the municipal building. In the afternoon the men-of-war again fired broadsides and manned their yards. A grand exhibition of fireworks was given, extending four miles long. It marched in five divisions, with five bands of music in each division. The line was much crowded with people, who applauded enthusiastically. The windows and steps everywhere were filled with ladies, who clapped their hands or waved their handkerchiefs as the troops marched past.

Why the Marriage Was Deferred. BALEMINGTON, Oct. 19.—A gentleman who is in a position to speak with authority says that the report that the marriage of H. A. Herbert of Muck Rose, Ireland, and Miss Rebecca Williams, of this city, had been postponed is untrue, and that all the reasons assigned for such are unfounded. He states that no day has been set for the wedding, but that there had been no disagreement between the parties as to the marriage settlement; that there had been no question raised as to the legality of Mr. Herbert's divorce from his first wife. Nothing has occurred to warrant any of the reports put in circulation, and the marriage will take place when it best suits the convenience of the interested parties.

Mr. Vanderbilt Bobs Up Sorely. New York, Oct. 19.—The members of the Vanderbilt family who were not on Wall street yesterday morning say that William H. passed a good night and without any apparent suffering from his mishap of Wednesday. Yesterday morning he arose at his usual hour and ate a hearty breakfast. Aside from a good shaking up, Mr. Vanderbilt says he suffered no inconvenience, and went to work as usual. He had a very nervous headache, but no other symptoms, and escaped from the hospital without a scratch.

It Was Butler's Bill. WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The Civil Rights act, which has been declared unconstitutional, is not, as is assumed in some quarters, the Summer Civil Rights bill. That bill was not believed to be constitutional by many of the Republicans who voted for the measure which the Supreme Court has just declared void. The bill before the Senate Court was the bill which General Butler reported to the Judiciary Committee of the House, and was the measure on account of which he has always boasted he could control the colored vote.

THE MAN IN THE WELL. Rescued Alive and but Slightly Injured After Being Buried for Twelve Hours. DAYTON, O., Oct. 18.—Charles Hyronimus, who was buried in a well, was rescued from what appeared to every one to be his horrible fate, at noon yesterday. He was somewhat injured by being pulled up through the sticks and dirt by a windlass, but was able to walk home. He has entirely recovered and is enjoying himself with his friends.

Hyronimus' spirits revived under the influence of the whiskey passed to him through the air-hole, and as his situation became no worse and he was assured that all efforts would be made to rescue him, with no doubt of success, he so far forgot his misery as to smoke a lighted cigar sent down to him, and afterward indulged in song. His hilarity was quenched shortly before his release by the closing of his air hole by an unexpected cave of sand, which necessitated the introduction of a lead pipe and air pump.

Five thousand people were present around the mouth of the well when Hyronimus was dragged out by a windless and rope. When rescued he was standing in water up to his chin, which was rising steadily, and would soon have covered his head.

The horror of his recent situation has not yet dawned upon him, as his already stimulated spirits have, since his escape, bubbled completely over. He says he rather enjoyed the situation than otherwise after he began taking the whiskey, although up to that time he suffered more than death.

The private loss is estimated at $20,000. Work will favor and the hurricane the misery and devastation are something terrible. Fighting the Vanderbilt Roads. TORONTO, Can., Oct. 19.—It is reported here that the Grand Trunk Road is making the offer for a new west shore line down the west side of the Hudson and parallel with the Hudson River Road, and other roads between it and the Grand Trunk system, thus carrying the war against the Vanderbilt consolidation right into New York.

—Some of our jewelers are complaining that a traveling jewelry peddler is canvassing the city, selling suicide jewelry, and representing his goods of the best material, and that he also supplies our home dealers; etc. Good jewelry can always be obtained at much better prices of our regular home dealers, who are responsible, than from any traveling concern, no matter what the representation.

—The Madison Journal, of Thursday, publishes the verdict of the coronor's jury in the case of Charles A. Witt, who was killed in the railway collision at Hanover last week, and adds: "From the above, it will be seen that the whole blame for the accident is ascribed to the railway company, which, according to the verdict, is crowding 'too much business into too short a space of time.' The verdict will doubtless meet the approval of the public, and it will be especially pleasing to the train-men of the Northwestern company, who are almost continually complaining of the very state of affairs which the verdict decides was the cause of the accident."

—On the grounds of the institute for the blind in this city, is a lucky grove, which bears a fair crop of nuts. One day in the week at least, the pupils of the institute go to the grove and gather the nuts, which affords them a pleasant pastime. But boys from the surrounding neighborhood take the liberty of going to the grove and stealing the nuts, which in this case especially, is unpardonable. There are other groves in which the neighboring children can gather nuts, and as the pupils of the institute can not see, but are well acquainted with the grounds belonging to the institute, this grove should be strictly set apart for their own use. Those who have been in the habit of running to these grounds and stealing nuts, should readily see the force and the justice of this position, and not commit any further trespass.

Unquestionably one of the finest dramas ever put on the stage is Esmeralda. It has a charm for everyone who hears it. It is clear and beautiful, with many interesting situations, an excellent plot, and remarkably fine comedy parts. It was produced in the city several months ago by one of the Madison Square companies, and was produced exceedingly well, but the performance last night, in many respects, surpassed that of last winter. The stage settings were very fine. The cast was a splendid one, and among those who did most excellent work were Mr. John Woodward, as the "North Carolina farmer," Miss Belle Gilbert, as "Esmeralda," Mr. G. J. Henderson, as "Estabrook," the comedian of the company, and a rare actor; Edward Lounsbury, as "Nora Desmond." As a performance, good in every particular, it was never surpassed at Myers opera house.

Criticisms on Miss Guernsey.

From the daily newspapers published along the route of the Miss Minerva Guernsey is rapidly gaining success on the stage. The Madison Daily Journal of October 9, where Rachelien was performed, says:

"The light of Julie from her home and her impassioned story to the Cardinal was most charmingly effective and stamped Miss Guernsey as one of the most talented and womanly of actresses."

The Burlington Daily Gazette, of the 10th instant says:

"Miss Minerva Guernsey, who played 'Ophelia' so admirably, like Mr. Milo, a novice on the stage, just might be called a seventh appearance in that character. This we know from heresy, not suggested by observation; for who would believe the actress who personated the pensive, fair haired daughter, whose heart vibrated to the passion she has inspired, loving in the silent depths of her heart, far more than she is loved by her admirer to the stage and its surroundings. It was a difficult part, played with most promising excellence."

They played Hamlet at Kookuk, and the Daily Constitution of the 13th instant pays Miss Guernsey the following compliment:

"Miss Guernsey, who has been upon the stage but a short time, merits special attention. As a leading lady she has already taken high rank, and won the audience last evening with her assumption of the role of 'Ophelia.' In the mad scene she did some especially fine and strong acting."

The same paper of the 15th in noticing Miss's "Poet's Revenge," says of Miss Guernsey:

"His support is excellent. Miss Minerva Guernsey, as Elvordina, portrayed girlish innocence and native charm, and succeeded most admirably in seconding the star's most arduous work."

The notices regarding Mr. Min have usually been quite complimentary.

Duck Shooting.

The Madison Democrat took the "whole bakery" last summer telling "fish" stories, and now that the season for shooting ducks has arrived, that paper has commenced telling duck shooting yarns, and this is the first one: "There is now camping, not a thousand miles from this city, a party of gentlemen who are just laying the ducks low. Four crack shots of the party have had a test of their shooting abilities, resulting in one party having 177 and the other 176 ducks."

AFTER MANY YEARS.

A Sister's Search for a Long-Lost Brother Finally Rewarded.

A Shelbyville (Ky.) dispatch to the Courier-Journal says: Just after the arrival of the evening train last night a handsome and stylish young lady put in an appearance at the Armstrong Hotel and registered as Miss E. E. Sbaa, of New York City. Her appearance and manner, in connection with her excited inquiries for one Mr. W. J. Shea, and her own desire to see him, made her the object of much curiosity and attention. Upon investigation it was ascertained that she was in search of a brother who mysteriously disappeared from New York some seven years ago, and until within the past few days had never been heard of. Her story is quite a romance and would be the foundation for a first-class novel. It is as follows: She is the daughter of a wealthy wholesale shoe merchant doing business in New York City. Her brother, of whom she is in search, was some ten years ago established by his father in the hardware business in their native city. Owing to his attention and withal, after a brief business career of three years he tangled his affairs in such a manner that he and his home, never making known to his relatives his residence or occupation. About a year and a half ago his father and sister, having been unable to learn anything concerning the wayward son, and brother, started from home determined to find him, if possible. They traveled all over the Union, spending quite a large sum of money, with no success, and were fast coming to the conclusion that their search was in vain, and were on their way home from New Orleans when they accidentally learned that a man by the name and surname of the description of the lost one was in some part of Kentucky engaged in sawing machine business. Arriving in Louisville they learned that such a party was in Shelbyville. The father was by this time exhausted by hard travel and compelled to rest. The sister, encouraged and strengthened by the hope of meeting her brother, halted not, but alone boarded the Shelby train and, on arriving there, was rewarded for her weary but patient search by finding the long-lost brother, alive and well.

Mr. Shea has been living in this place for the past two years. About three years ago he met the daughter of Mr. H. W. C. Perry, of this place, in Louisville, and after a brief courtship they were married. From Louisville he and wife moved to Lexington and from that point they came here.

FRIGHTENED TO DEATH.

A Nasty Boarder Frightens a Nervous Old Lady to Death, and Then Escapes. (Chicago Herald.)

The corpse of a woman, middle-aged and a cripple, was laid out in a back room on the third floor of the McNeill Building, at the corner of Clark and Chestnut streets, yesterday afternoon, and two women, sisters of the deceased, who were engaged in raising the body for the grave, said her death was caused by a shock or fright resulting from the willful attempts of John Connelly, a lodger in the house, to startle the other inmates. Among the latter are a number of Custom-House employees, and they entertain the same views as to the cause of the woman's death, and condemn Connelly, who is said to be a lawless, drunken fellow. He is a barber, and rooms on the fourth floor of the building. Mrs. Sherman, who has been in feeble health for years, occupied a room directly beneath the one in which Connelly lodged. A nervous disorder rendered her particularly sensitive to noise of any kind, and, aware of this, it is alleged, Connelly never lost an opportunity to annoy the old lady. Sunday last he was unusually turbulent. He shouted, sang and yelled at the top of his voice, and hurled various small articles about his room. On Monday Connelly became intoxicated, and in the evening, while on the way to his room, encountered Mrs. Sherman in the hall-way, and, without any excuse for so doing, he compelled the old lady to pause while he blackguarded her in a shocking manner. John, the colored janitor of the building, was awakened by the uproar, and hastily ascended by means of a back stairway to ascertain the cause. Connelly fled to the next floor at his approach, but continued his abuse, calling Mrs. Sherman vile names and aspersing her character at every breath. She staggered into her room almost overcome by light and sank to the floor as the colored man entered. He caught her in his arms and bore her to a lounge, but she lapsed into a state of unconsciousness from which she never revived. Dr. Tabor was summoned and everything was done to resuscitate the sufferer, but in vain, and at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon she died. Immediately after the woman's death Connelly absconded himself, and was not seen again about the house during the day.

THE MOABITE SHEEPSKIN.

An Alleged Relic That Does Not Stand the Test of Modern Sunlight. (Philadelphia Times.)

The Moabite Sheepskin Decalogue now in the British Museum turns out to be a fraud, and everybody is saying: "I told you so." Its rumormongers are not right. Its adherents are wrong. Wise professors are saying it is absurd to suppose that bits of sheepskin can have lasted three thousand years. So the preponderance of our newest criticism, like the preponderance of average life, appears to be against the Decalogue. Like the late ice-bound ark, it does not stand the test of modern sunlight, and hence it must go. This is a great pity. The old Decalogue was in need of moral support. Perhaps it was this thought that led the devout Shapira to invent the Moabite sheepskin. But inventions won't take the place of religious truth, even in these late times.

The Surviving Hen of Casamircicola. (Paris Letter in the Boston Journal.)

French evening papers to-day tell a quaint story of an old woman of Ischia who was lodged in the cellar of a house by a number of beams which had fallen about her without injuring her, but which had prevented her moving more than a step or two away from her during the three or four days of her imprisonment. When the soldiers who were clearing away the rubbish reached her and had succeeded in making a passage, one of them holding out his hands to help her up to the light and air, she placed in them a hen which had partaken of her captivity, and said to the man: "Get this to a place of safety and I will look out for myself."
